Flag/View HistoryCorundum is used more as an alloy to make advanced versions of other armor, such as striped iron armor and armor plate. Korundum ore melts iron ore to make 1 steel bar, so don't go crazy smelting all the ore crowns in corundum bars if you know you don't need steel (questionable as some advanced armor and weapons require steel ingot as well). For my ore, you must have a pickaxe in your inventory. You don't need to equip it; just have it with you. Mines are usually pickaxes lying around and also you can purchase them from shopkeepers if you don't want to look for them. This is most likely to represent the chrome that is fused with to improve steel, although the chrome is a silver color. The corundum can also be stand-in for copper, as the ore corral stains are green, a feature of copper that turns green as it oxidizes. There are also copper circles in the game, but there is no corresponding ingot, while the color is color circles are like a corundum. The most famous forms of corundum are rubies and sapphires. Despite the fact that the corundum is a nine on the scale of hardness Mohsa - best with diamonds - Daedrian armor and weapons, Dragon armor and weapons, and Ebony armor and weapons better. This is probably because the hardness itself does not make the material very good for forming a weapon or armor with. Also, as mentioned above, Corundum in Skyrim does not correspond to real life, so its Mohs scale position is likely to vary from real life, perhaps closer to copper. Corundum bullion appears very similar to metal gnomes, although gnomes have a brownish cast. This could mean that Corundum is an ingredient in a lost gnome metal recipe. UESPWiki - Your source for older scrolls from 1995 Ores and ingots are various forms of metal that can be collected and a blacksmith to create and improve the elements. Ores can be extracted from veins found in mines and other areas around Skyrim, such as some caves and outdoors in rocky areas. Ores (already mined) and bullion can also sometimes be found in a variety of places and on some people and objects. The ores smelter gives ingots, which can then be used in forges to create armor, weapons and jewelry, or in grindstone and workbenches to improve armor and weapons. This page lists all the items that are classified by traders as des and bullion. They are traded by jewelry merchants as well as blacksmiths (including Imperial and Stormcloak quartermasters found in most military camps). They can also be sold to merchants of common goods.
